

In Stanley Kubrick's 1964 masterpiece Dr. Strangelove or: How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb, the director famously insisted that the War Room's iconic 22-foot circular table be covered in green felt, specifically like a poker table. He did this despite knowing the entire movie was being shot in black and white.

DR. STRANGELOVE

"Sir!
I have a plan!"

Why Kubrick Wanted a Green Table

Kubrick wanted the green felt to serve as a psychological cue for the actors. He designed the scene to symbolize world leaders playing a high-stakes poker game with the fate of humanity. Even though the audience could never see the color, the green table successfully altered the mindset and behavior of the cast on set, enhancing their performances during the intense political satire.

Where the Movie Was Shot

Despite being a story centered on the U.S. Pentagon and American military bases, the film was shot entirely in England, primarily at Shepperton Studios near London.

- The War Room Set: Production designer Ken Adam created the legendary, cavernous War Room set at Shepperton. It featured a massive concrete-style bunker, a giant overhead light ring, and maps tracking nuclear flights.
- The B-52 Bomber: The interior of the B-52 bomber was also meticulously recreated as a set at Shepperton because the U.S. Air Force refused to grant Kubrick access to a real bomber.

Would you like to know more about how Ken Adam designed the War Room set, or are you curious about other hidden details from the production of Dr. Strangelove?

AI responses may include mistakes. Learn more about

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More